Northwind Archive Services
Records Office

12 October 2026
NA/2026/0457
2 pages

Dear Ms Rahimi,

Thank you for your letter about the transfer of the harbour records to the city archive. We have now reviewed the list you sent and agree that the ship logs, the pilot books and the harbour master's letters from the years before the new quay was built belong together and should move as one collection.

Before the transfer, each box will be checked against the list, cleaned and given a new label with its shelf number. Damaged volumes will be set aside for the conservation team, who will decide whether they can be handled by readers or should be copied first. We expect this work to take about six weeks.

The reading room will close for two days while the boxes are moved. Readers who have booked a place on those days will be offered another date, and the catalogue will show the new shelf numbers as soon as each box is in place. Copies of the most used volumes will stay available in the reading room throughout.

We would be grateful if your office could name one person to answer questions from our staff during the move, and to sign the receipt for each delivery. A draft receipt and the schedule of deliveries are enclosed with this letter.

Once the collection is in place, we will hold a short visit for your staff to see the new storage and the reading room. We will write again with a date once the last delivery has been checked.

Please let us know if any part of the list has changed since you sent it, or if some boxes need to stay with your office for a while longer. We can adjust the schedule of deliveries without difficulty at this stage.

Thank you for your letter about the transfer of the harbour records to the city archive. We have now reviewed the list you sent and agree that the ship logs, the pilot books and the harbour master's letters from the years before the new quay was built belong together and should move as one collection.

Before the transfer, each box will be checked against the list, cleaned and given a new label with its shelf number. Damaged volumes will be set aside for the conservation team, who will decide whether they can be handled by readers or should be copied first. We expect this work to take about six weeks.

The reading room will close for two days while the boxes are moved. Readers who have booked a place on those days will be offered another date, and the catalogue will show the new shelf numbers as soon as each box is in place. Copies of the most used volumes will stay available in the reading room throughout.

We would be grateful if your office could name one person to answer questions from our staff during the move, and to sign the receipt for each delivery. A draft receipt and the schedule of deliveries are enclosed with this letter.

Once the collection is in place, we will hold a short visit for your staff to see the new storage and the reading room. We will write again with a date once the last delivery has been checked.

Please let us know if any part of the list has changed since you sent it, or if some boxes need to stay with your office for a while longer. We can adjust the schedule of deliveries without difficulty at this stage.

Thank you for your letter about the transfer of the harbour records to the city archive. We have now reviewed the list you sent and agree that the ship logs, the pilot books and the harbour master's letters from the years before the new quay was built belong together and should move as one collection.

Before the transfer, each box will be checked against the list, cleaned and given a new label with its shelf number. Damaged volumes will be set aside for the conservation team, who will decide whether they can be handled by readers or should be copied first. We expect this work to take about six weeks.

With best regards,

Helen Morrow
Head of Records